The Butte Inter-Mountain, published at Butte, Mont., sent to the ed at Butte, Mont., sent to the World's Fair, by special excursion train, 30 of the most popular young ladies in Montana. The voting contest was state-wide, including each of the 26 counties in Montana. In each of the 23 counties one candidate was elected; the circulation of the Inter-Mountain being larger in women were elected from one and two each from the remaining coun-

In conducting the contest each county voted separately. Blanks for the nominating candidates were provided by the Inter-Mountain, and in ing. order for a girl to enter the contest. T it was only necessary to have the in-dorsement of three well-known citizens of her county.

The 30 successful young women were given a two-weeks' trip to the World's Fair, every item of expense paid, even street car fares while in St. Louis. Louis. Each winner was furnished with transportation from her home to Butte and return. A special train was run from Butte to St. Louis. Excel-lent hotel accommodations were provided for the party and special facilities for seeing the fair to best advantage were offered. The young ladies themselves elected a chaper-

The Inter-Mountain gave much space to this unique contest, and the entire state was interested in it. There is no copyright on the idea. Any publisher can use it with profit, in connection with the Lewis and Clark Centennial.

Branded Over a Brand.

It is required of persons register-ing stock brands with the county clerk to furnish a duplicate. This is generally burned on a piece of leather with the original brand. One of these pieces of leather filed this morning shows that the particular portion of cowhide from which it had once fore felt the searing iron. On rough untanned side of the leather, is the new brand, and on the opposite side are the faint lines of the mark placed there when the animal was a yearling, to denote its owner.
